Dr. William Jury is profoundly expert discussing both the physical and the metaphysical. With a Master's Degree in Spiritual Psychology and a PhD in Physics, he is uniquely qualified to show where these two worlds meet, how they differ, and how ultimately they may prove to be different aspects of each other.

Over the past few decades, the tools of modern science have permitted an exploration of both the innermost workings of matter and the farthest reaches of outer space. Through the use of models and increasingly precise observations, scientists are able to trace the universe back to its earliest origins, now believed to have been a colossal Big Bang, which arose out of nothing more than 13 billion years ago.

However, the more that science discovers, the more it is mystified by discoveries that defy imagination. There are immense black holes that devour everything and incredibly minute particles that can transfer information instantly over any distance. There's the baffling yet highly successful theory that says nothing exists until it is observed. And then there's the all-pervading dark energy with properties no one understands but that occupies every bit of space in the universe.

Has science finally found God with its observations, as some believe, or will it eventually explain everything without the need for a creator? Join us for this fascinating discussion of what we know, what we think we know, what we know we don't know, and some ideas about where it's all taking us.
